It's time to make Christmas toys all over again.

Make a child happy with one or two of your workshop creations.

Here's a cracking good start from STEPHEN O'CONNOR with this pull along
"Caterpillarwigglypede"

RICHARD used swamp kauri and heart rimu woods to make his nifty mini-candle holder.

MITCHELL's first shot at inlay work on a turned project. Top job!

DAVID ROSE used blocks of Tassie blackwood and black walnut for his lidded pot. A special feature is the exceptionally fine finish

MICHAEL DOYLE loves to experiment with new ideas and often leads the charge into any whole club initiative.

Study the picture carefully and see if you can figure out how Michael managed to put together this multi-part wooden and quite complex hoo-Jacka-pipi thingy.

Try some turning on Saturday morning.

YES, the workshop is open tomorrow (Saturday 3rd Oct)

9.00 - 12 Noon

Duty Officer: Robert Wiseley

PHOO! Here's a special turning.
A curved wing with central bowl and paua inlay.
It must have been a challenge to drill a Forstner bit hole into a curved surface to accommodate a paua dot.
However, using a block of Tassie blackwood, this feat was well-met by STEPHEN HAWLEY

'Eye-ometres' are the most important tools in your arsenal of wood turning implements.

Is yours sharp and ready to go?

ROSS has had his reconditioned and put to clever use with this pair of candle holders.

A top job here.

CHRISTMAS is only 84 days away

Who is Neil?

Neil Joynt has been woodturning off and on for 25 years. He is a self-taught wood artist living in a rural location in Tokoroa New Zealand. Prior to this interest in woodcraft Neil always had a creative bent. In his late teens he enjoyed making jewellery, working copper and brass. Today Neil works as a woodturner and artist. He is deeply inspired by the naturally occurring patterns of wood grain and the hidden beauty within each piece of timber. When not creating Neil is keen to demonstrate and teach his techniques to all who ask.
